In which political participations was defined as (a set of practices made by citizens or used to lobby in order to participate in making, implementing and controlling the political decision in a participation free of pressure from the authority) while participants considered political participation as a democratic principle and one of the principles of modern national state, a principle originates and grow in light of national democratic systems which based on citizenship, responsible freedom, equality in rights and duties in addition to separation of powers. At the end of the workshop participants recommend the importance to work on specifying the number of youth legal seats within Legislative Council, giving a space for youth to express their ideas away from accusing them to betrayal or disbelieve and raising youth awareness in the several educational stages of human rights and public freedoms.

Tubas/Saturday 9/10/2010

Human Rights and Democracy Media Center "SHAMS" conducted a workshop regarding "woman's rights within international Charters" in Tubas city. Participants perceived that woman's rights is one of the complicated human rights' issues especially art present. While difference in this issue is referred to the suffering of women in the long history in terms of unfair deteriorating discrimination against her dignity as well as preventing her from contributing to public or private life. Also participants stressed that international charters starting from International Declaration of Human Rights call for equality and reject all kinds of discrimination, besides the convention for eliminating all kinds of discrimination against woman which became applicable since 1981 in which all woman's rights were declared and admitted. At the end of the workshop participants recommended the significance to work on raising the level of societal awareness regarding woman's rights and updating the Palestinian legal structure to accord with international charters and they also stressed the significance to enhance woman's political participation based on partnership instead of completing the governing systems.

Nablus/Sunday 10/10/2010

Human Rights and Democracy Media Center "SHAMS" conducted a workshop about "societal responsibility" in collaboration with Alquds Open University. In which attendees talked about the current development in the concept of societal responsibility and that there is a confusion between philanthropic work and societal responsibility, and that there should be separation between philanthropy which attributed to individual work while societal responsibility indicates a systemized plan resulted from accurate expectations related to actual requirements accordingly, it has a larger impact, while organizations' commitment to societal responsibility's dimensions in terms of the environmental, social and economic ones lead to creating a status of trust between these organizations and audience in addition to accomplish accordance with international conventions and charters particularly human rights conventions. Attendees recommended the essence to enroot the concept of societal responsibility within children at home and school, to include this concept within school curricula and to involve children in extra-curricular activities which contribute to support this concept, besides they stressed that societal responsibility should be the responsibility of individuals and citizens as the focus should be on the individual then moving toward the private sector.

Tulkarm/Monday 11/10/2010

Human Rights and Democracy Media Center "SHAMS" conducted a workshop about "enhancing youth rights and societal participation" in Tulkarm governorate. In which participants talked about the essence of youth role in developing and advancing the community as they represent the core of this community, voluntary work and its importance because it originates from the inside without pressure since it represent an internal national belonging, while the obligatory work opposes young peoples' aspiration or objectives and hinders it and voluntary work should be creative and untraditional to keep contact with youth in their community. At the end of the workshop participants recommended the importance to work on handling youth main difficulties and take it into consideration like unemployment, education and participation within decision-making in addition to focus on youth voluntary works and spot light on it and to establish the construction of sport cultural centers which contribute to youth empowerment.

Jenin/Sunday 17/10/2010

Human Rights and Democracy Media Center "SHAMS" conducted a seminar regarding "mechanisms of international protection for human rights: reporting and complaints' system as an example" in the Arab American University in Jenin governorate. In which participants emphasized that human rights and public freedoms represent a national internal issue since the first step for promoting human rights and public freedoms include national sources, religious instructions, philosophers' contributions and social intellectuals, besides stimulating countries to be complied with related rules and regulations. As well, they talked about international mechanisms including reporting and complaints' system besides the non-governmental national mechanisms have an exceptional role in enhancing human rights and secure the respect for it according to many countries. Participants at the end recommended the significance of national both governmental and non-governmental mechanisms as a first fundamental step toward defending human rights.

Jerusalem/Monday 18/10/2010

Human Rights and Democracy Media Center "SHAMS" conducted a workshop about "the role of civil society organizations in promoting the concepts of good governance" in Alquds University in Jerusalem. in which good governance was defined as "practicing political authority and managing the community's affairs and sources as well as achieving socio-economic development including the country's constitutional institutions in terms of legislative and executive powers in addition to civil society organizations and the private sector. While UNDP defines good governance as the political authority's undertaking to its works within specific standards to accomplish sustainable development, to build up the state's log-term or short-term resources, to provide integrity and accountability and to respect the public interest. While civil society organizations can play a key role within several central pivotal issues in its communities, then it is either a tool for supporting and promoting the authority's role in enhancing the concepts of democracy, civic rights and good governance or it can play the opposite role in supporting good governance via regular awareness campaigns, being involved in drafting laws, preparing studies and researches, presenting and discussing reports linked with monitoring and contributing to the promotion of role of law. Participants recommended the essence to unify and join roles between civil society organizations to disseminate and enhance the concepts of god governance.

Hebron/Saturday 23/10/2010

Human Rights and Democracy Media Center "SHAMS" conducted a workshop concerning "the substance of enhancing citizenship's concepts inside the community" in Sourcef town in Hebron governorate. The concept of citizenship was tackled within the context of the community's movements and transformations, and in the heart of this movement relationships are made, interests are exchanged, needs are created, rights are originated and duties or responsibilities are highlighted. When looking at elections or questionnaires as a form of participation which reflect the people's sovereignty, but it also represents citizenship since the third item of article 21 from the International Declaration of Human Rights indicates that elections should be fair and conducted periodically within public voting and equally between voters, and to have a confidential voting. And within the first and second items of the same article, it emphasizes the citizen's right to equal participation in undertaking public positions for his/her country or in managing the public affairs for the country either directly or by selecting representatives freely. It should be noted that this participation isn't represented just in registering within electoral lists or voting, but it overcomes to accountability regarding the efficiency of the electoral system, its manners, methods and compare with others. Participants at the end recommended the importance to work on raising the level of awareness about the concepts of citizenship and educate this concept since it establishes for a well-aware generation which understand its role and involvement in public life.
